Mr. DALBYMPLE thought levels. In connection with this exchange lanother column. .The rupes value of produce, he said, had declined in almost exact proportion to the advance in exchange. and the whole produce of the country had been suddenly changed in value by fifteen or twenty per cent; the great and steady increase in the trade of India in recent years had been concurrent with a falling exchange. and it was in his opinion impossible with out some surjety to look at a change which ad altered the condition of the working of this great trade. In China, unfortunately we have no such great increase in trade to record as has taken place in India, but the change in the value of silver could be held to justify anxiety in India, no less might anxiety be felt lest the same cause should adversely affect the comparative inexpansive trade of China. We should be inclined to think, however, that the growth of trade in India is due much more to the extension of railways and the general development of the country's resources than to the effect of the of coolies into the country was exaggerated by cheap rupes; and arguing by analogy we think the trade of China will experience 193 little if any adverse effect from the rise in exchange, certainly not to any extent calculat ed to affect the prosperity of our local bank ing institution, whose general business, we are told, independent of exchange, has never been more prosperous.

In the meantime the shareholders have the satisfiaction of pocketing a dividend of fifty shillings a share, with the prospect of something as good or nearly as good for the present the matter being left in abevance to the end been lost and the balance at credit of that public confidence in the stability and meeting in 1875 quoted a friend of his, a the only danger to that bank is from within If they are true to themselves the directors one of continue | progress and prosperity there have been temporary checks, it true, such as in medical -parlance we might nature of a constitutional disturbance.

Wertheimer, the co-respondent, was called. His presence created a decided sensation in the courtroom. He is a flashily dressed young toan of about 26, with a strong Hebraio cast of leatures. His story was pratty much a repetition of Ludy Danlo's account of their relations with the addition of some interesting details bearing mainly upon the fact that he went to a certain shop to buy baby linen. He-went to America for various -- reasons, one of them being in connequence of a quarrel he had with his father and his uncle concerning a number of presents he had given to Lady Dunlo since her marriage. They consisted of horses, carriages, diamonds and other presents. He had on one occasion put £500 worth of furniture into the house for her before he went to America. He admitted his father had represeded him for it, and that he had said to him: "I hear you are spending a great deal of money on this woman. If you are not getting enything for it, you are a fool If you are getting something for it, you are a blackguard."
